Cincinnati, June 19.—Governor John M. Pattison, after a prolonged illness, passed away at 4:20 o'clock Monday afternoon at his country home in Milford, a suburb of this city, Bright's disease or chronic intestinal nephritis being the cause of his death.

e week ago the governor was carried into his home, from which he had gone five months before to his inauguration as chief executive of the state, the intervening time having been spent on a bed of pain.

On a beautiful hillside near his home his body will be laid to rest Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, after services in the Methodist church.

·Governor Pattison's death came rather suddenly, and was unexpected. even by the attending physicians and his family, and was caused by a relapse from his disease. The declining stage of Governor Pattison's final illness dates from last Friday, when his wish to be taken out on the front looked over the familiar scenes he loved so well and was in great spirits, when suddenly he complained of severe pain. The sick cot was hurriedly wheeled into the house and the nurses applied stimulants; and Dr. Belt was hastily summoned. This attack was really the beginning of the end, though the governor soon rallied and Friday evening seemed as well as he had been before. Dr. Holt was so encouraged with the condition of the governor on Sunday that he hesitated about coming out from Cincinnati Monday. Sunday at 8 o'clock the governor became restless and suffered considerable acute pain, but later in the night he sank into a quiet sleep. The nurse thought he was sleeping restfully and naturally, although Mrs. Pattison, as was her custom, slept in the same room where the governor lay, she was not disturbed. When the morning dawned there had been no change, and when the family arose it was with the belief that he was sleeping peacefully. At 10 o'clock Dr. Belt made his usual morning visit, and found his patient in a comatose state. All was done that medical skill could do, but the governor never rallied, and death came peacefully at 4:20 Monday afternoon. At the governor's bedside when he died were Mrs. Pattison and his two daughters, Misses Alethia and Ernestine, and the nurses. Governor's iliness.

bent on a return to his country home at Milford, and as soon as his weakened condition permitted he was brought to Cincinnati, spending several weeks in Christ hospital, until the physicians thought him ready for the trip to, his country home. One week ago he-seemed to have so far recovered his strength that no immediate effects were anticipated from the trip to Milford, and a special electric car carried him to within a short distance of his home, an ambulance taking him the balance of the way. He seemed to be benefited by the trip rather than otherwise, and has been reported as steadily gaining strength, although a report was current last week that he had suffered a relapse. This report was, however, later denied by the physicians, who expressed hopeful views as to the outcome of his sickness up to within a few hours of his death. That the death of the governor was entirely unexpected was evident when it is remembered that in a contest over the requisition of Ellsworth Liverpool in the court in this city both of the governor's physicians appeared Monday to testify that his condition was such that he was able to transact official business. His private secretary, L. B. Houck, also testified to his good condition, explaining that he had recently gone over much business with him. Although there has been for months an expressed fear that Governor Pattison would not be able to re turn to his office at Columbus, the cheerful statements from his sick room tended to create a belief that any fatal outcome of his prolonged sickness would be long deferred.

WERE HELD SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Ritualistic Services Were Held by Members of Lincoln Council—An Address by the Rev. W. V. W. Wagar—List of Deceased Members.

The annual memorial services of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics were held in the Massillon cemetery Sunday afternoon. Lincoln council had charge and was assisted by A Massillon Boy Becomes a members of Ensign Bagley council. Jr. O. U. A. M., and Loyal council, Daughters of America.

Members of the three councils met at the lodge hall at 1 o'clock and were taken to the cemetery in cars at 1:30. At the entrance gates, lines were formed and, with the national colors at the head of the column, two hundred members marched to the receiving vault in front of which the exercises were carried out.

The ritualistic service, although brief, was impressive. The members sang the opening and closing odes and the Rev. V. W. Wagar, pastor of the Wesley Methodist church, delivered an address. The graves of deceased members were decorated, after which the lines were reformed and cars were taken back to the city.

The Rev. Mr. Wagar in his address called attention to the four cardinal principles of the order. He spoke first of the principle of restricted immigration, pointing out the fact that a native born American must wait until he is 21 years old before being parmitted to enjoy all the privileges of the nation, while immigrants who have reached manhood before coming here, may enjoy those privileges in a few years. The argument was advanced that no immigrant should be given all the American privileges until he has manifested a true American'

Constitutionality of the Aiken Law is Questioned.

Liquor Dealers in Every County in Ohio-Wednesday the Last Day.

Massillon liquor dealers have been advised that, in view of the fact that the attorneys for the Ohio Wine and Spirit Association are now engaged in contesting the legality of the Aikin iquor law, they should assist the prosecution of the case by tendering to the treasurer of Stark county $175, which is one half of the tax provided for by the Dow law. The payment is to be offered not long ago and discussing the prosby writing and signing a formal offer of payment. Currency is to be offered in place of personal notes and witnesses are to be present at the time This agreement does not set aside any when the offer is made.

The Massillon dealers are advised that the county treasurer will, doubtess, refuse to accept the payment and his refusal is to be asked in writing. If the treasurer insists that $500 shall be paid, the dealer is advised to get the treasurer to give this statement in writing. The state association will be pleased if a county treasurer shall claim apply until new prices, conditions and that the present payment must be $500 and "That unless $500 be paid on or before June 20, that he will preceed to collect this amount from you by law.'

The association says that this declaration is just what the attorneys want and then the $500 cm be paid "under protest." The payment of the $500 under protest is also to be witnessed.

Salbonkeepers ha e received blank forms from the association, which are to be filled out and used when the payment of $175 is offered. The Aikin tax is due Wednesday night. It is expected that many Massillon liquor dealers will pay their tax under protest in keeping with the wishes of those who ! are to test the constitutionality of the law, which raised the tax to $1,000 a

By ARTHUR W. DUNN.

The Nelson bill is what those familfar with statehood legislation for the past six or eight years call the measure which has passed providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one state. The Arizona and New Mexico proposition is not believed to need much consideration, as it is thought that it is sure to be rejected. Back in the Fifty-seventh congress the house passed a bill for three states-Oklahoma, New Mexico and Arizona. It was known as the "three state bill." Indian Territory was left out of the measure. This bill was held rill. The funeral was held from the up in the senate committee for a long Merrill residence at 1 o'clock Monday time, and the late Senator Quay made her husband, Adam Wendling, four before the senate. Finally an agreement was reached to have the bill reported and considered at the short ses-

The Nelson Bill.

Then it was that Senator Knute Nelson proposed the joining of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one state, and when the committee made its report Nelson presented the single state measure as a substitute for the three state bill passed by the house. Before action was taken, knowing the temper of the senate, Nelson withdrew his substitute in order to prevent its being defeated on a vote. But this Nelson bill was the basis for that which finally passed. The more the people consid ered the subject the better satisfied Tammany For Bryan.

Billy Watson, who is "Big Tim" Sullivan's personal representative in Washington while the congressman is not in the capital, says that Tammany Hall is absolutely for Bryan for president. He declares that he is "speaking by the card." for Tim Sullivan is one of the men who tell Tammany what to do.

Sharp, but Not III Tempered.

Senator Teller of Colorado beld the floor of the senate one evening when an effort was being made to fix a time to vote on the canal bill, but had yielded to Senator Blackburn, who made quite an extended speech. In the midst of it Senator Hale broke in and appealed to Teller to allow the proposi

"No," replied Hale; "it is the province of the senator from Kentucky."

"Mr. President," went on Blackburn, "my vanity almost permits me to conclude that the senate or some senators are very auxious to have me continue, because I have already stated that if I were left alone I would be through in two minutes by that clock, and I want to quit.' "Let us see how long the senator will take in quitting," remarked Hale, with absolute composure.

"The senator from Maine would be more comfortable in his chair," retorted Blackburn amid laughter of oth-

"I do not want to interfere with the senator from Kentucky," said Hale by way of apology, "but I think he and I are trying to fix a time for a vote."

"Now," continued Blackburn, "after the very pleasant suggestion made by the senator from Mame I am resolved that I will disappoint senators, and I will quit."

And that is what he did after a few sentences. Then Hale got the agreement, which was all he cared for. Alabama Has Learned.

Cobwebs Not Harmful.

During the hearings before the house ronunittee on agriculture on the meat inspection amendment Attorney Cowan of Texas, replying to complaints against the packing houses that cobwebs hung about the walls, declared that they did not affect the beef. He mentioned a famous drinking resort in this city and said it was hung with cobwebs, yet the best whisky in town was obtained there. As soon as the testimony was shown to them the proprietors sent half a case of the whisky to the committee room to back up the assertion of Cowan.

General Grosvenor of Ohio was making a speech in the house and was interrupted by Representative Perkins. and in the midst of great confusion and in reply to what appeared to be a question Grosvenor said: "Well, the gentleman is making a speech in my time. HURTS FOREIGNERS.

Measure of Japs to Gain Manchurian and Kerean Trade. Victoria, B. C., June 20.-The steamer Empress of China brought advices of measures adopted by the Japanese to gain the Manchurian and Korean trade which will handicap foreign merchants, if not prevent them, from competing with Japanese experters in Manchuria and Korea. The program includes the making of Dalny a free port in the sense that import duty will be remitted on Japanese goods for Manchuria, though collected on foreign goods. By means of bounties and subsidies Japan will encourage its merchants to flood Korea and Manchuria with all kinds of goods at the lowest prices, prices at which the foreigner can hardly hope to compete, especially after the new customs tariff comes into effect next October.

Towne's Resolution.

Washington, June 20. - Representative Towne introduced a resolution requesting the secretary of state to furnish the house with copies of all communications between the department and Hon. H. N. Allen, late American minister and consul general to Korea. Also copies of all communications and complaints and allegations from all other persons tending to connect Mr. Allen, while acting as minister, with certain alleged frauds or attempted frauds upon the emperor of Korea and the Korean people in connection with contracts for public improvements. The findings of the department in the matter are also asked for.

Knox For Lock Canal.

Washington, June 20 - Senator Knox addressed the senate at length in support of the lock type for the Panama canal, contending that in point of feasibility and economy it is far superior to the sea-level plan. He took direct issue with Senator Kittredge as to the safety of the Gatun dam. The agricultural bill containing the meat inspection provision was received from the house and a substitute ordered printed for the information of the senate. The senate ordered another conference on the naval bill.

Canton, June 20.—Samuel Frank, better known to the police authorities in all parts of the country as "Jew Frank," has been arrested in Cleveland and is now on the way back to this city in charge of Acting Chief Patterson on a charge of being one of the three men who robbed Saloonist Edward Shearer of $325 in cash and a gold watch and chain. When "Skinny" Ellsworth and William Smith were arrested and the latter was identified in Cleveland last week by Shearer the officers there said that the other man was undoubtedly "Jew Frank," and they have been looking for him since upon other occasions and the Canton police have a slight acquaintance with Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock William Smith was brought to the city hall from the county jail for his preliminary hearing, he being represented by Attorney John Craine, of the firm All members of the Perry township of Craine & Snyder, while Police board of education were present at the Prosecutor Day looked after the interests of the prosecution. "It's all a pack of lies," said the new senator, "that I ever said I was coming here to reform the senate. And that does not mean I had intended to do so when I left Kansas and quit when I got here and smelled petroleum. If the senate is going to be reformed I don't think I will have any hand in it."

NEW SOCIETY FAD.

Newport Woman Adopts Oriental Style, Veil Hiding All but Eyes.

The first society fad of the season at Newport was introduced the other morning by Miss Mildred Sherman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Waits Sherman, while driving her father to the Wickford boat, says the New York American.

Miss Sherman, who is a clever whip and one of the last winter's debutantes, with her sister, Miss Irene Sherman, were a heavy double veil of brown caught with jeweled pins at each side of her hair, the veil spanning the face and leaving an opening for the eyes and forchead, a fashion much in evidence with the women of Malfa and Turkey.

Miss Sherman's identity was only made plain by the presence of her father and sister, together with the handsome and high stepping team of horses which are so well known in Newport. The new fad attracted no little attention and bids fair to become popular among the younger set of Newport.

REMARKABLE FEAT AT LONDON Won Blindfolded Playing Against Six Chess Players, Two at Draughts and at the Same Time Took a Hand

His Mental Power.

When the late Harry N. Pillsbury, the American chess master, was a child he would content himself for hours planning mimic battles with regiments of gaudily got up tin soldiers, says a correspondent of the Boston Globe. He delighted in forming his fighting men in all sorts of positions and then moving them together uptil with α grand sweep of his baby hands both armies were annihilated in an indiscriminate charge. When he was fifteen years old his brother Ernest taught him the first moves in the game of chess. Ernest was not an expert, but could play a very fair game. Harry learned quickly. So fascinating was the game to him that it actually interfered with his studies. He was then in the high school. It soon came to pass his brother was no match for him, and, there being a local club in East Cambridge, Mass., Harry joined that and began at once to make a reputation for himself.

Some years ago Pillsbury gave an extraordinary display of his ability at the Metropolitan Chess club in London, says the London Mail. He played blindfolded against six opponents at chess, against two at draughts and at the same time took a hand at whist. Seated at a table at one end of the room, he coolly manipulated the cards while promptly calling his moves in reply to the "teller," Mr. Michell, who announced the moves of his opponents at chess, and to James Hill, who performed a similar office for the draughts players. Play proceeded rapidly, for the American was a quick thinker and kept his opponents very much alive. Once he paused at one of the draughts games and said, "I guess I'll make a few moves right along at this board," and then dictated six-moves in rapid succession, which sacrificed a piece,

After eighty minutes' play he scored his first win at No. 5 chessboard, followed ten minutes later by the resignation of the draughts player referred One of his chess opponents next gave up, and the applause had scarcely subsided when the second draughts player had to own himself beaten. After

Pillsbury. In the afternoon he reneated the moves of four games which he had played blindfolded in exhibitions throughout the country. The moves were then shown on four large chessboards for the benefit of the onlookers, Chicago. among whom was the veteran Steinitz. Pillsbury accomplished this clever feat without making any errors. On the first board was shown a Ruy Lopez, won by Pillsbury at Lincoln, Neb.; on the second board a French defense, on the third board a Philidor's defense and on the last board a Ruy Lopez in which the consulting adversaries had street at very reasonable prices. selected the Steinitz defense to the Ruy Lopez. He concluded with an illustration of his remarkable power of memory. He asked the audience to write on thirty slips thirty different words. Then Pillsbury asked some one prisonment in the Ohio Penlientiary for the to call out the number or the word, and period of life. in each instance he supplied either the word or the number. In the evening twenty-four members and friends of the club sat down to participate in a blindfolded exhibition given by the champion on twelve boards. Four players who went at the master single handed, four parties consisting of two players in each and four parties consisting of three in each made up the team. The performance began at about 9 o'clock and was concluded after six hours and fifty-five minutes of play, with the result that Pillsbury won seven games, lost three and drew two. He made 434 moves.

For a long time Pillsbury mystified the world by winning from all comers in the guise of "Ajeeb," the Turkish automaton, in the Eden Musee at New York. Experts from all parts of the world went down to defeat before him, and they marveled how a mere machine could so triumph over the human brain, says the New York World.

Aside from all this, Pillsbury was one of the mental marvels of the age, his memory being simply prodigious. as may be appreciated from the fact that he established a world's record never before approached and likely to remain untouched of playing without sight of boards or pieces as many as twenty-two games simultaneously against as many different opponents of strong caliber.

LOCAL MILK AND MEAT INSPECTION. With increased knowledge of bacteriology and a corresponding appreciation of the important part which germ life occupies in the existence and spread of different diseases, siccial emphasis is coming to be placed open the importance and necessity of having food supplies, and particularly milk and meat products, free from centamination by disease germs. A thriving western city with which we are acquainted which has gradually evolved from a quiet rural hamlet to a bustling manufacturing center has lately decidmeat which are to be sold in the corporation. The city council was led to take this action as a result of the discovery across an acre of land, which approxi- of a considerable number of tuberculosis cases and the discovery that some diseased animals were being killed for the local market, eight hogs which the home butcher was too busy to handle being killed and dressed in a local packing plant which was under goverument inspection, it being found that one of the eight hogs was badly diseased. The incident cited simply goes to show that the day is not far distant when a sentiment touching the danger to public health from contaminated sources of food supply will be aroused to the point where it will insist on the careful inspection of these two important food products-milk and meat. And there is no place this gospel needs preaching more than in the smaller cities all over the country whose dairies and slaughter houses have not as yet been placed under official inspectiou. While some states provide for the killing of all dairy animals found affected with tuberculosis, the matter is usually left as a matter of option to individual communities, while in none of them, so far as we know, is there provision for the general inspection of beef and pork and a scientific examination of dairy herds. The day is near at hand when there will be a county or district official whose duty it will be to look after the meat and milk inspection of every town in his territory.

> COUNTY EXPERIMENT STATIONS. A departure that gives promise of adding greatly to the value and effecliveness of the work now being done at the state experiment stations and one that has been much discussed of late has in view a carrying out of the practical work done at the places mentioned at the different county farms. Instead of being compelled to study state experiments at long range and having to digest bulletins which are more or less technical and whose data and findngs are to some extent invalidated mate or soil condition, under the plan proposed these experiments are to be carried out under conditions that are known and which exist in each locality. The work to be done at the county stations gives promise of being especially valuable along the line of testing the value of different kinds of corn, grain and grasses that are at present grown, and later the introduction of new varietics, the conducting of feeding experiments and the putting to practical test of the many suggestions that grow out of the state work. The line of experiment proposed is to be carried on under the direction of the state authorities, who will receive the co operation of the county board of supervisors. In the writer's home county work of this kind is to be undertaken, the board having set aside a certain sum for the prosecution of the work. This year the seed corn that has been planted in the county is to be given a thorough test and an oracular demonstration given of the advantage and disadvantage of planting good and poor seed. The plan outlined would seem to be one that had in it the possibility of almost limitless cultural interests of the whole country. THE CHIEF DANGER TO ORCHARDS. for a large orchard leads us to believe that there is no enemy of the apple tree that at all compares with the little white borer which works in the trunk at and just below the surface of the ground and whose presence is usually indicated by the sawdust-like excreta. The trees should be carefully examined at intervals during the summer and the borers dug out with a sharp knife. Where the borer is in its second year and cutting it out would necessitate too large a wound for the tree, a wire or pliant twig may be inserted and the pest killed in the tree. It is well in making the search to scrape the trunk carefully to an inch and a half below the surface of the ground, as the hole out of which the brown dust is discharged sometimes gets covered up, thereby concealing the presence of the borer. Keep the borer out of your orchard, and you will be practically assured that it will be thrifty and vigorous, with very few trees missing as the years go by.

[Original] The honeymoon was over for young Mr. and Mrs. Archibald, and they were entering the most dangerous period for married people-the portal between remance and practical wedlock. The first ripple came one evening at dinner, when the husband announced that he had an engagement in the city with a party of his old cromes. The wife was capable, emphasizing the "dear" ting his arms about her. It was all of plete and prices reasonable, and going around behind her and putno avail. Had he not dreaded the chaff of his bachelor friends he would have broken the engagement and stayed at home. As it was, he kissed his wife several times, not electing the slightest response, and with much misgiving went out. Mrs. Archibald had never before been compelled to pass an evening alone. A member of a large family, with hosts of friends of her own age, her life had been one delightful holiday. Now among strangers, in a strange place, sitting alone listening to the ticking of the clock-it ticked loud enough to wake the dead-a very natural revulsion came over her. Before her marriage she had thought she would die without her lover. Now she thought she would die without her home and all who were in it. It occurred to her with sudden and overwhelming force that she had exchanged everything for nothing. No, for a life of loneliness. And her crown of sorrow was that after all the billing and cooing the man for whom she had made the sacrifice would not give up the society of his old chums for hers. She threw her self on a sofa, buried her face in a pillow and moaned:

"Mother!" The young husband had voluntarily told his wife that he would return by the 10 o'clock train, reaching home at ting, Gas Mautles, Globes, Chan-11. This necessitated his leaving his deliers, Brackets. friends by half past 9, and when he proposed to do so there was a shout of derision. "She's got him under already!" cried

"Come, old man," said another, "put up a good fight in the beginning and you'll have an easy life. If you don't slavery is yours forever." And so Mr. Archibald, rallied by his to train till the last, which left at 12 midnight. But some one bad borrowed his watch on pretense of doing a sleight of hand trick with it and had set it back. Therefore when Archie, as they called him, rose to go there was a shout of laughter, and he was informed that the train had been gone ten min-

All this puts Mr. Archibald's friends in a somewhat bad light. But they were not so bad as they appeared. After badgering their victim for awhile they told him that he needn't worry. One of them had an automobile waiting, and they would all see him home to make sure his wife didn't abuse him. Unfortunately they were a long while getting away, and at 2 o'clock in the morning, when they were spinning over a road through a lonely wood, there was a report, the automobile turned sidewise against a telegraph pole, and the party was spilled in the road. A tire had exploded. The only injury to any one of them was a

It was 7 a, m, when the party rode up to the Archibald domicile, and all alighted at his invitation for breakfast. Leaving them in the library, he mounted the stairs to find his wife. She was not in her room, nor had her bed been occupied. He rang for a servant, who informed him that Mrs. Several years' experience in caring Archibald had taken the 6 o'clock train for her mother's home. Going downstairs, he excitedly announced to the party the result of their escapade. The news temporarily threw a damper over them. Then some one proposed to take Archibald, to his wife's refuge, fifty miles distant, and bring her back. But one of the party, a widower, made a suggestion.

scratch on Archie's hand.

"It wouldn't do, fellows," he said, "to go there without something to work on. There has been a terrible automo bile accident. Archie has been injured. Put him to hed. Two of us will stay with him while the rest go and break the news as delicately as possible to The proposition was accepted. Archie was carried by two stout fellows to his room and his hand wound in bandages. The automobile dashed away. . .

About noon the machine came puff ing up to the house at lawbreaking speed. Mrs. Archibald would not wait to be handed out and, rushing into the house, threw her arms wildly about her husband.

"Forgive me, darling," she cried. "Be careful of his hand," exclaimed one of his masculine nurses. "We have ione the best we could for the poor fellow since you were not here to nurse "I shall never forgive myself."

A few days later an automobile of the latest pattern came, a belated wed ding present from the friends who had caused the rupture, to Mrs. Archibald, with a polite note saying that the givers intended it to bring her speedily in case she were absent when "poor Archie" needed her.

The injured man in a week's time succeeded in getting away from his wife to business, resolutely declining. however, for a month to unbandage his hand. He might have left her for uis old chums when he liked after that, but her tender, solicitude for him while recovering from his wound weaned him from them, and they were obliged either to give him up or see him at his home. A Home Colony As Planned by Upton Sinclair @-operative Project, Outlined by the Author, to Improve and Simplify Domestic Life of Mankind.

Volunteers to Undertake the Enterprise With as Few as Twenty Families. Will Devote His Time to It For Years if Need Be--How He Would Solve the Servant Problem.

By UPTON SINCLAIR in the Independent, June 14.

HAVE a problem to solve. I write an article about it for the reason that there are others troubled with it, and I beheve that a number of people might solve it together where each would fail by limself.

In earrying out my purpose I am obliged to discuss what the world would call my "private affairs." So I explain at the outset that I am a socialist and consider that the private affairs of most individuals constitute the most important public affair now existing. I discuss my own because they are typical and because they happen to be the ones with which I am most familiar.

The problem is the one commonly known as the "servant problem." I invite you to consider the situation of a man who is possessed of a small family and a small income and wishes to be free to turn his attention to intellectual pursuits.

Ideal Place to Rear a Child.

For the past two years we have lived upon a farm, and a farm is the ideal place to bring up a child, you have read in the books. At the outset a hunger for companionship seized our David; and he found his way to a neighbor's and played with a little girl who stuttered. After a week or two we found that he was stuttering, too, and stopped the visits, but too late, and now, for all I know, he may continue to say every word three times over as long as he lives. And when he was not learning to stutter he was up in the pear orchard stuffing himself or behind the house switaming the baby ducks and his shoes in the washtub or out in the kitchen mixing himself a pudding of pepper cruets, candlesticks and milk. So it was found necessary to get some one to take care of him, so little by little the problem has arisen, for you must understand that it is not merely a question of finding a governess or kindergarien expert; it is a question of setting up and keeping under way a home for him, and it is a question of an establishment of serv-

The mistake was in the beginningyou say-if you object to servants you ought never to have married. But is a man to be denied the privilege of parenthood just because he happens to possess an intellect? And is it for the best interests of the race that its future generations should be furnished exclusively by the ignorant and callous? And if authors, artists, scientists and philosophers are to reproduce their kind what is to be done? Shall they have to marry their housekeepers? I have made many sacrifices for my art, but I confess that that one would have staggered me.

Of course we can do it if we must. We can stick to the farm and raise all our own food and keep our health and do it all at moderate expense, but how pitiful it is! We cannot travel; we can never hear any music or attend the theater; we can have only books and our own thoughts winter and summer, year in and year out. We cannot send our child to a kindergarten, to school; he can never be with other children. Can a mere writer of original books afford a house in the city or city prices for impure food? And of course we cannot keep a wide awake boy in a boarding house or apariment. No, we must have our own home and in the country, so our thoughts come back from every flight. Let us make one desperate effort to try to get good servants and then pay them anything and keep them, and then when we get the machine running let us get a little house near by and keep it for our own and allow no one there and go and live there and cat cold food and do our own work whenever we wish to be alone with our thoughts. That was our plan until I took the resolution to write this article. There are hundreds and even thousands in exactly the same plight, I said. And why should they all sink back and reconcile themselves to the monstrous absurdities of isolated housekeeping?

As a preliminary to explaining what I wish to propose I shall state one thing that I do not propose. I am not dreaming any sort of self supporting colony, to set a new ideal and realize the co-operative commonwealth. What I am making here is a simple business profession for an association of people whe may possess a moderate income to secure the benefits of the application of the machine process to their domestic affairs.

Living Like a Feudal Baron.

Here am I on my little farm living as my ancestors lived, like a cave man or a fendal baron. I have my little castle and my retainers and dependents to attend me, and we practice a hundred different trades—the trade of serving meals and the trade of cleaning dishes, the trade of washing and ironing clo hes, of killing and dressing meat, of churning butter, of baking bread, of grinding meal, of raising chickens, of cutting wood, of preserving truit, of heating a house, of decorating rooms, of training children and of writing books-and all these crowded into one establishment, in close proximity and all jarring and clashing with each other and all carried on in the most primitive and barbarous fashion upon a small scale and by unskill; ed hand labor. It takes a hundred cooks to prepare a hundred meals badly, while twenty cooks could prepare one meal for a hundred families and do it perfectly. It costs $100,000 to build and equip a hundred kitchens; it would cost only $5,000 to build one kitchen. It takes a hundred churns and a hundred aching backs to make a thousand pounds of butter; it would take only one machine and a man to tend it to make the same thousand pounds, and the cost of making it would be cut 95 per cent. Bat, of course, you cannot have large buttermaking except it is done for profit, and that means adulteration and poisoning. It takes a hundred ignorant nursemaids to take care of the children of a hundred families and develop every kind of ughness and badness in them. It would take only twenty or thirty trained nurses and kindergarten teachers to take care of them co-operatively and bring them up according to the teachings of sci-

One could show this same thing in a thousand different forms if it were necessary, but it has all been reasoned out in Charlotte Perkins Gilman's book, "The Home," and any one to whom the idea is new may read it there. The purpose of this paper is not to persuade any one, but to move to action those already persuaded. To such I ofter my co-operation.

Near to New York.

The following embodies my own conception of what such a "home colony" should be. It would be located within an hour of New York and would have 100 families and 300 or 400 acres of land, healthfully located, near some body of water and as unspoiled by the hand of man as possible. It should have an abundant water supply and a filtering plant, an electric light and power plant and a large garden and farm, raising its own stock, meat, poultry, fruit and vegetables and canning the last for winter use. It should be administered by a board of directors democratically elected. For the management of its various departments salaried experts should be employed, machinery should be installed wherever it could be made to pay, and the best modern methods should be applied in every industry. All its purchases should be in bulk and tested for quality, and so far as the preparation and serving of food is concerned the processes should be kept as aseptic as a surgical operatiou. The buildings of this home colony should be of frame at the outset, of simple and expressive design, each structure exactly adapted to its specific purpose. The buildings should be conveniently grouped-those for the children in one place, those for cooking and cating in another, those for reading, for music and social intercourse, for recreation and exercise in till other places. The greater part of the land would of course be given up to farm and woodland and to the individual dwellings of the families. The ground available for this latter purpose should be divided into lots, priced according to size and location and leased to stockholders for long terms. Each would erect his own home, according to his own taste—a home of course of a kind hitherto unknown, with no provision for the cooking of food or the training of children or other trades and professions. It would be a place where the family met, to rest and play and sleep. It might be large or small, anything that the owner chose to make it. My own would be a four or five room cottage of rustic design, and it would cost from $600 to $800. Besides these there should be apartment buildings owned by the colony and dorma tories with rooms for single men and women. As to the public buildings, there should be a large and beautiful dining hall and a modern, scientifically constructed kitchen. There should be separate tables for each family or for congenial groups of people. The service should be unexceptionable, the food simple, but perfect in quality and preparation. There should be a vegetarian service for those who prefer this cheaper mode of life, and the charge for board should be based upon the cost of the service. I will probably he laughed at, but I believe that, granting the land, horses and machinery, buildings, equipment and capital, the members of such a colony as I describe could be provided with perfect service and an abundance of food of the best quality at a total cost of $100 a year per person.

A Children's Heaven. So much for the co-operative preparation of food. And now for the caring for children. There should be two separate establishments, one for infants, who like to sleep, and one for children, who like to run and shout. Both should be scientifically constructed and ventilated and kept as clean as an up to date hospital. The food should be prepared under the general direction of a physician. No building for children should be over two stories high, and the upper windows should be beyond the reach of children. No matches or exposed fire should be permitted, and holders, but also from those who will extinguishers and an automatic sprinkling apparatus. These establishments should be under the supervision feachers or managers, and from perof a board of women directors, and the sons baving business experience who washing, dressing and feeding them playing wit i them and teaching them, should be done by trained nurses and kindergarten teachers who live in the colony as the friends and social equals of its members. In other words, it is my idea that the caring for children should be recognized as a profession and that servants should have nothing to do with it. It is my idea that it should be done in a place built for the purpose, with floors for babies to crawl where there is no dirt for them to eat, with playgrounds for children where there are no stoves and no boiling water, no staircases and wells, no cats and dogs, no workbaskets, lamps, pianos, sewing machines, jam closets, inkstands and authors' writing tables. Instead there should be sleeping rooms and bedrooms and sun parlors for nursing mothers, a separate building for the sick, kindergarten rooms and indoor playgrounds for bad weather, and a big all outdoors romping ground, with sunny places and shady places, swings, rocking horses, sand piles and all other accessories of a children's heaven. Every member of the community I propose would have his own home, to which he would invite his personal friends as he chose, and the other members of the community he would meet in the same way that be meets acquaintances in business and politics, in theaters, restaurants and clubs. In a colony of a hundred families there ought to be persons of every kind of inclination, and it would not be in the least necessary for any one to associate with those who are not congenial. This spirit, if wisely and carnestly cultivated, would solve the "servant problem" for the colony and solve the health problem for its members as well. In this community every member would be credited for the time be worked, and it ought to become the custom for the men to help, with the harvests and the women with the preserving of Luit and the children with the berry picking and the weeding of the gardens. I have no doubt that there are thousands of young men and women in New York city, students of art and music and the professions, who would be glad of a chance to earn their way in a community where class feeling did not make labor degrading. I appreciate the difficulties in the way of such a project, the chances at present against a coal beaver being a socially possible person, and I am not insisting that the day laborers should share in the privileges of the community. But I do think that this should certainly be the case with those whom we select to care for and teach our children and also, if possible, with those whom we permit to prepare and serve our food. If I am not willing to shake a man's hand or sit next to him in a reading room I do not see why I should be willing to cut what he has cooked. Building For Social Purposes.

The re would be a laundry in the colony, a boat, livery, and bath houses, a drug store, a general store, a refreshment room. There would, of course, be a complete telephone service, electric lights and hot water or electric heating throughout the buildings. There would be a resident physician, and perhaps before long teachers of music and languages might find it worth while to join the colony. There would, of course, be a building for social purposes, with large piazzas for summer and sun parlors for winter. would be a hall for lectures, concerts, theatricals and dancing. There would be a reading room and a circulating library of periodicals and recent books. It is your custom to spend, say, $50 or $100 a year for these, and you could achieve your purpose co-operatively for a fifth of the expense. There would be a gymnasium and a swimming pool and, of course, tennis and croquet and baseball grounds. There would be stages to meet all trains and closed conveyances b to convey people to and from the dining hall in bad weather. There would be a livery stable, at which you could hire or keep a rig for about one-fourth what it would cost you elsewhere.

I think that such a community should be planned for the accommodation of a certain number of members and the necessary working force and should be limited to these. Not all of the members need be stockholders, of course Others might be admitted to the benefits of the association, but in that case the stock should pay dividends, and in any case the management of the corporation would have to be vested exclusively in the stockholders. For the administration of the various industries there would have to be a superintendent, a man of first class executive ability, responsible to the board of directors, and there would be a corps of managers of departments, each a thoroughly experienced man; a manager of the farm and stables, of the truck and flower gardens, of the purchasing department and the co-operative store, of the catering department, of the buildings and grounds, the power plant and the heating department. How many such men there should be and what they should be paid, how many employees of all sorts would be necessary, is one of the questions upon which expert advice is needed. I am willing to get a complete set of figures for the enterprise I have outlined, provided that I hear from a sufficient number of people to make it worth while. I am per feetly and seriously in earnest about the matter, willing to give my time to it, for years if need be. I hope to hear from 100 or 200 people who are interested. I am willing to undertake the enterprise with as few as twenty families. I wish to hear not merely from those who will invest as stockthere should be a night watchman, fire rent or build homes-from men and women who are willing to contribute their labor as waiters, cooks, nurses,

What Came of a Scullion

(Original.) There was trouble on the mind of the chief cook of Signor Fahero, a wealthy Venetian gentleman living in France. Signor Faliero had invited a number of distinguished people to dinner. There were to be princes, nobles and merchants of Venice and, more important than all, a number of art critics. I say "more important than all" because that was an age when the fine arts flourished and a man who could judge of a painting or a statue was looked up to more than one possessing birth or wealth. At any rate, these men were of more intrinsic worth than all the rest at this dinner of the Venetian.

But what was amiss in the kitchen? A confectioner who had been charged with making a large candy ornament to decorate the table had sent word that it had been spoiled and there was no time to make another. The chief cook stormed and tore his hair. Perfection was his aim, and what would all the delicacies he had prepared avail without the georgeous centerpiece?

A boy who served as scullion advanced and said in a timid voice:

"If you will let me, I think I can make you something that will do in place of the confectionery piece." "You, Antonio? What do you know about fashionable things?"

"I have worked in the yard of my grandfather, Pisano, the stonecutter." "Nonsense! A stonecutter knows nothing about artistic work." The boy begged hard, and as there was nothing else to be done be was given permission to try his hand. He sent for some butter and fashioned it into a crouching lion. It was placed upon the table, and soon after the princes, the merchants and the art critics were ushered into the dining room. The chief cook were a melancholy look, keeping his eye fixed on what he considered a blemish to an otherwise splendid table. The guests ranged themselves around the table and took seats. The cook saw one of the art critics looking fixedly at the butter lion, and the poor man inwardly cursed the moment that he had consented to use the scullion's work. Then he noticed that the art critic said something to the man sitting next to him, and they both looked at the lien. The chief cook's knees trembled beneath him. Surely his master would discharge him for putting this fierce looking creature that was made of such soft material before these great men. He had hoped they would not especially notice it, and already two of them were looking at it and talking about it. But when several other groups laid down their spoons, neglecting the soup that had cost the chef so much pains and began to stare at the centerpiece he was in

"Signor Faliero," said the man who had first noticed the lion, "we are not surprised at your munificence in gracing your table with a work of genius. but we are at a loss to know how you consent to place the expression of his de Paris. genius in so perishable a substance as butter."

The bost looked at the lion, then inquiringly at the chief cook. The latter had become so confused over the outcome of his substitution of a few pounds of butter for a splendid candy centerpiece that he did not hear or did not understand what the guest had said. He broke down and confessed his culpable folly. "Signor," he said tremulously, "pardon my iniquity. Just before the dinner was ready the confectioner sent word that he had spoiled the splendid candy centerpiece I had ordered and which would have been in every way worthy of your noble guests. When I was in great distress at this mishap Antonio, the scullion, came to me and offered to make something to fill its place. In an evil hour I listened to him. If you and your noble guests will forgive me I will remove the blemish." For a moment there was a hush of guest that had spoken, an eminent art critic, said to the chief cook:

The works afterward achieved by the great sculptor are curious not only for their intrinsic value, but that they came from such a small beginning. THE HUMAN BRAIN.

It Undergoes Wondarful Changes During Its Growth.

The wonderful changes which the human brain undergoes from the moment when it first appears in the embryo until it becomes the perfected laboratory of thought characteristic to the matured human being has been commented upon by several of the leading writers on biology, physiology, etc. During these successive changes, or, rather, transformations from the lower to the higher sphere, the human brain not only takes upon itself the general shape and form of the braius of various representatives of the lower classes of animals, but appears to have the same structural constituents, at least to a certain degree. Thus it has been found that the original germ of the brain as it appears in the human embryo has the exact outlines of a serpent's thought factory. After that the changes which take place while the brain is assuming the various shapes which it must undergo before it becomes perfect give it a decided resemblance to the brains of fishes, birds and mammiferous ani-

"Hein's "Thoughts on the Structure of the Human Brain" and Wilson's "Anatomy of the Human Body" both mention these queer transformations, as does also Hugh Miller in his famous work, "Testimony of the Rocks." Miller puts it in this way: "It has long been known that the human brain is built up by a wonderful process, during which it assumes in succession the form of the brain of a serpent, a fish. a bird, and lastly, before it assumes the characteristic human form, it takes upon itself the outline of a mammiferous quadruped's brain." Hence the remark made by scientific writers that "man is the sum total of all animals."

POOR HANDWRITING.

One of the Causes That Downed Napoleon at Waterloo. The nose of Cleopatra had a marked nfluence on the destinies of the ancient world. The handwriting of Napoleon I., we are assured by recent historians, had a similar effect upon the evolution of the modern world. He did not write; he scrawled. By reason of this, among other causes, he lost Waterloo. Grouchy could not read with exactness his decisive message. Was it "bataille engagee" (battle is on), or "bataille gagnee" (battle is won)?

Grouchy chose the latter significance and, not believing it necessary to pressforward, arrived too late. So much for the curl of a letter, a pen stroke or an Megible swell to an "a."

This question was brought forward by the writing master of the elder Dumas.

"Remember, Alexandre," the master said to him, "the great defeat of the emperor was due only to his scrawling hand. If you wish to succeed in the world be careful of your heavy and your light strokes." So if Napoleon had known how to write legibly or if he had taken the trouble to do so his descendants would reign today in France and we should not have had the republic. It appears historically established today that Dumas' writing master was right. And on such slight obtained the services of one who should | things rests the fate of empires,-Cri

The Osprey.

Ailusion is often made, especially in fashion journals, to "osprey" feathers. Few words have been more loosely bandied about than this bird name. The Roman author Pliny's "ossifraga" (bone breaker) has been identified with the lammergeyer, a vulture that is reputed to break up bones too big for it to devour whole by dropping them from a height upon rocks. But both "ossifrage" and "osprey," a newer form, came to be applied to quite another bird, the fish hawk, which is now the true "osprey." Yet the "osprey" feathers - more properly egret feathers, or aigrettes - do not come from this bird, but from the egret, or esser white heron.

The Sea Otter.

The sea otter combines the habits of a seal with the intelligence and amusing character of the otter. When met astonishment about the table; then the in herds far out at sea, which is but seldom now, they are commonly seen swimming on their backs. They even eat their food lying in this position on lion was fashioned by a scullion and the water and nurse their young ones on their chests between their paws, exactly as a south sea island mother "Signors," said the critic, "one of the swims with her baby in the water. world's greatest geniuses has been When swimming in this attitude they even shade their eyes with their paws when the sun dazzles them.

A Widow's Inconsistency

[Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastment.] The Widow Renderson employed a adapted particularly for pressing hired man to run things, and she hadn't | meat, although it can also be used for been a widow five months when he quit pressing fruit and vegetables. Meat hoeing potatoes one day to come up pressers as heretofore constructed from the field and make her an offer of marriage. She indignantly ordered him to pack up and move along, and before night he was gone.

Hired man No. 2 was told to take warning by the fate of No. 1, and he restrained his love until one day after | of meat within the limits of the press her year of mourning was up. The widow had bought a new cow, and the cow turned out to be a kicker. When she had knocked the bired man off the milk stool three times in succession and he was running for a fence rail to pound her to a jelly the widow came out to the barnyard and said;

"It's all your fault, Joe. I can milk that cow night and morning for a year, and she will never stir a hoof."

She took the pail and stool and sat down. She had been milking for five minutes and was just about to look around with a smile of superiority on her face when the cow's right leg shot out like the piston rod of an engine, and the widow and the pail and the at any desired height by means of colstool went end over end and brought up against the fence.

Joe ran over to pick the woman up and say something about her smartness, but she was unconscious. Then he dropped down on his knees and begged her to come back to earth for his sake. He loved her like a mad Niagara and couldn't live without her. He seized her hand and pressed it, and in his emotion he even went so far as to print a kiss on her marble brow.

But it was one kiss only. While he was puckering his mouth for a second one the widow awoke from her solar plexus blow and rose up and kicked him harder than the cow had kicked her. He started to hunt another job.

A third hired man took his place. He knew of the fate of his predecessors, and yet not two months had gone by when he put his foot into the same bear trap. He had fallen in love at first sight, but had been very careful not to show it. His suspenders held him until one day he got a third drink of hard cider, and then he tried to take the widow's hand and tell his love. He got the hand against one of his sunburned ears. He also got the bounce.

When hired man No. 4 brought his runk the Widow Henderson decided to leave nothing to chance. She looked him square in the eye and said:

"I want no nonsense. The minute you begin to play the fool I'll begin to bounce you. I am hiring you for a bired man and not for a husband."

"You refer to the men who have departed?" queried the man, whose name was Tom Parker and who neither looked nor acted like the average bired

"Yes, sir, I do." "They were idiots enough to fall in love with you, I understand?" "I don't know as there was anything so idiotic about their falling in love with me," answered the widow, a bit provoked, "but I want no such tom-

The widow had set out to tell the new hired man what was what, and when she came to think it over she couldn't figure that she had got the best of it. He knew his business as a hired man and attended to it. While he was of the family, he was not with it. He kept to himself as much as possible, and, while respectful and willing, he was quite formal. The widow stood it for a couple of weeks and then began to feel piqued over it. The only one she had to consult with was her hired girl, and one day she said to her:

a queer acting fellow" "He's very standoffish, I see. He hasn't asked me two questions since he came."

"Don't you think the new hired man

"The others used to ask you about me, didn't they?" queried the widow. "A hundred questions."

"And they said I was smart and good looking?" "They were forever saying so, and I can't understand about Thomas, as he makes me call him."

The widow couldn't either. She wanted no marriage proposals, but she did want to feel that she was of some account in the hired man's eyes. It miffed her to find that Parker treated her-as indifferently as the well pole, though with the greatest respect, and that he preferred to sit in his own room of an evening rather than enjoy her society in the family room. She discovered that he was better educated than she was, bad good business ideas and that he could beat her all hollow at buying and selling. She had a rag to chew, and she chewed it for many long weeks. She had threatened to bounce him if he fell in love with her.

and now she was mad because he hadn't. As she chewed she found herself admiring and liking, and one day when she was churning the butter it came a hen sitting on eggs, says English over her all at once that she was actu-Country Life, and, with the incubator ally in love. "Do you really think those other men vere idiots?"

IMPROVED MEAT PRESS.

Simple of Construction and Easy of Operation. The accompanying engraving illustrates a new hand press which is have usually been made with but a single meat box. The construction here illustrated comprises a series of meat boxes, each fitting into the one below, so that the device can be used for compressing any desired amount by simply using the required number of meat boxes. Furthermore, by the use of different boxes a number of different kinds of meat can be pressed at the same time. The boxes with the meat pressed therein can be placed in an icebox, or the press itself can be provided with an ice holder, so that the meat can be left to cool under pressure. The press is of simple construction, comprising a perforated base supported on four short legs and carrying two upright standards, which are braced together at their upper end by an arched coupling member. A crosshead is mounted on these standards and can be secured lars adjustable on the standards.

Threaded through the crosshead is a hand screw, which is adapted to press the press plate down on to the meat. The boxes for the meat are so made that they can be readily taken apart when desired to remove the meat. Each box consists of two angle pieces, which are fastened together at opposite corners by hinge pins. The boxes have no bottoms, but perforated plates are placed between the layers of meat Each box is formed with grooves at opposite corners, which serve as guides for the box above; also with a series of perforations (A) through which the water and grease pressed from the meat in the box above may péur out. Vertical walls on the base serve to confine these liquids so that they will pour through the perforations in the base plate. When it is desired to cool the meat in the press a large box is placed about the meat boxes, as shown in the illustration, and this is filled with ice.—Scientific Amer-

Machine Prints Tickets.

The tesserograph has been invented by Roberto Taeggi Piscelli of Florence. Italy, to do away with the present practice whereby thousands of tickets for all stations are printed in advance and kept in stock and also to register automatically the amorats cashed. The machine prints each separate ticket in one operation from a strip of thick paper, the ticket issued bearing the name of the issuing station, the destination. date of issue, ticket number, class, kind, price, the company's monogram, etc., and on the obverse any service indication, or commercial advertisement as may be most suitable to each company. An exact duplicate is issued simultaneously for checking purposes. The machine can print 400 different kinds of tickets. No tickets can be issued until the inspector in charge on opening the ticket office in the morning has freed the machine and, as the case may be, has brought back all the totals to zero.

Mountain of Iron.

Forests surely could not grow on the back of the mountain of iron in the state of Durango, Mexico. It is called the most remarkable mountain in the world and claims clear title to the name by its 2,000 feet of height, its three-quarters of a mile of thickness at the base and its almost entirely solid iron substance. Naturally the iron manufacturers have been dreaming of the fortunes it holds in its big pockets and of the way in which they could dive and delve into them. They have tried to lease the mountain to work it. but until recently have been refused by the Mexican government. The ore obtained from the iron mountain is said to yield about 87 per cent pure

Coal Enough For 700 Years.

The coal fields of eastern Shansi, which are soon to be accessible through the railways of the Peking syndicate, says Fuel, contain, it is estimated, some 600,000,000,000 tons of coal, or enough for the world's supply for 700 years, while in western Shansi there is a larger field of bituminous coal; also there are enormous deposits in Honan and in Kansu. These figures, a mining engineer thinks, show the absurdity of a recent statement in the Nation that the available coal deposits of the world have a life of only 300 years, and most people, we imagine, will be intlined to agree with him,

Germany's Coal Production. The official statement of the production of coal in Germany in 1905 gives the quantity as 121,298,167 metric tons, of the value of $262,000,000, an increase of less than 500,000 tons over 1904. The output of lignite was 52,498,507 tons, an increase of nearly 4,000,000 tons over 1904. The lignite produced was valued at $30,000,000.
